It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Ware River
R.R. Co.

An engrossed bill to authorize the purchasers of the franchise of the Ware River Railroad Company to organize a corporation and complete its road (which originated in the House) passed to be enacted and was laid before the Governor for his approval.

Boston and Portland
Railway
Trust Co.

Mr. Harmon moved a reconsideration of the vote whereby the bill to authorize the consolidation of the Eastern Railroad Company and the Boston and Maine Railroad under the name of the Boston and Portland Railway Trust Company was referred to the committee on Railways.

The President ruled that the motion was not in order, as follows :—

Recognizing the full force of the 17th rule providing for reconsideration, the Chair also recognizes the importance of the 26th rule of the House, exempting petitions and like papers from the rule requiring the Clerk to retain all bills and papers, subject to reconsideration, in his hands until the time for reconsideration shall have expired ; and the Chair considered that the right to reconsider was made effectual by the retention of the papers in the hands of the Clerk, and that by the delivery of said papers to committees, such right was constantly liable to be destroyed.

Considering, moreover, that all papers referred to committees partake of the nature of petitions, and that when referred, they become at once the property of the committee, liable to be reported at any moment, and remaining only accidentally in the hands of the Clerk, the Chair rules that they could not come under the motion to reconsider ; that the right no longer remained in that legislative body out of whose hands they had passed.

Thereupon, Mr. Harmon appealed from the decision of the Chair.

And the question being stated : " Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate " ? it was determined as follows, to wit :—

YEAS.—Messrs. Bancroft,	Banister,	Clark,
Coe,	French,	Giles,
Johnson, R.,	Lawrence,	Merrill,
Morse,	Stickney,	Todd,
Wallace,	Whittle,	Woodwell.—15.
NAYS.—Messrs. Baker,	Brown,	Dwellely,
Fuller,	Griffin,	Harmon,
Jacobs,	Learnard,	Parsons,
Thompson,	Wright.—11.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained. Thereupon, Mr. Brown moved a reconsideration of the vote whereby said decision was sustained ; and the motion was placed in the orders of the day for to-morrow.

NAYS. —Messrs. Baird, Coe, Harmon, Parsons, Washburn, Woods,	Brown, Dwellely, Johnson, N. L., Torrey, Whiting, Wright.—17.	Carpenter, Fuller, Morse, Wallace, Whittle,

So the Senate refused to reconsider.

Boston and Portland
Railway
Trust Co.

The orders of the day were taken up, and the first matter therein being the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the decision of the Chair was sustained, in relation to the motion of Mr. Harmon to reconsider the vote by which the bill to authorize the consolidation of the Eastern Railroad Company, and the Boston and Maine Railroad, under the name of the Boston and Portland Railroad Trust Company, was referred to the committee on Railways,

The President addressed the Senate as follows :—

On the question of reconsideration of the vote of the Senate, sustaining the ruling of the Chair upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred with the House, in the reference of the "Bill to consolidate the Boston and Maine and the Eastern Railroads," to the committee on Railways, the Chair desires to state :—

The Chair recognizes the importance of the 17th rule of the Senate, which provides that "when a vote has passed, except on motions specified in rule seven, it shall be in order for any member to move a reconsideration thereof on the same or the succeeding day, as the foundation of free, fair and untrammelled discussion of all bills upon which the Senate is to pass." The Chair also finds that in order to secure this opportunity and privilege, the 18th rule of the Senate provides that "bills, resolves and other papers, in reference to which any member has a right to move a reconsideration, shall remain in the possession of the Clerk, until the right of reconsideration has expired." Upon the operation of this latter rule alone can the provisions of the former be carried out; and hence to all bills and resolves passing through their various stages, the 18th rule is rigidly applied, unless suspended by formal vote.

It seems, however, to the Chair, that papers referred to the various committees of the Legislature do not come under the provisions applied to bills, either by law or custom. All papers thus referred are manifestly in the nature of petitions, whether formally drawn as petitions, or bills introduced on leave, or orders of inquiry, or of notice. The principle of the petition underlies them all; and they are all entitled to the same treatment, all demand the consideration of the committees, and all may alike become the subject of argument and investigation before the committee. Practically this view has maintained at all times; and the course pursued by the Clerks of both branches, as the Chair understands, has been to pass such papers over into the hands of the committees, whenever called for, often without any delay whatever, and regardless of the 18th rule, which is so strictly applied to bills passing through their various stages.

The Chair is of opinion that not only custom but parliamentary law is strongly on his side. Cushing says, in section 1388 of his Parliamentary Law, "Whatever may be the form of the proceedings (i.e., to select committee, &c.) the subject so committed is disposed of until the report of the committee." Cushing also says in Parliamentary Law, section 1446, "The motion to commit, if decided in the negative, cannot be renewed." The rule of the House of Representatives, United States, No. 42, provides that "no motion to postpone to a day certain, to commit, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day, and at the same stage of the bill or proposition."

It seems to the Chair that this all points to the opinion that matters once referred to a committee have passed beyond the reach of the body of the Legislature, and are subject to the action of the committee to whom they are referred. That this is not only good law but good sense, the fact that in one hour from the time of reference a committee may be considering the matter referred, may have given the parties in interest a hearing, and may have reported a bill, is convincing to the mind of the Chair.

But not only do parliamentary law and sound judgment seem to sustain the Chair, but the 26th rule of the House, to which the Chair referred in giving his opinion, also points in the same direction. This rule, which was formerly analogous to the 18th rule of the Senate, was amended about twelve years since by inserting the words, "except petitions, enacted bills, orders of inquiry and orders of notice," for the express purpose of sending such papers immediately to the committees to whom they were referred, to prevent delay and to relieve the Clerk from any responsibility in regard to the matter, where petitions and other papers referred were passed forward according to convenience or accident.

In declaring his opinion upon this question, the Chair has endeavored to realize the importance of keeping in mind the general principles upon which a law should rest, and the concurrent circumstances which should throw light upon its interpretation. He is of opinion that in this way alone can law keep pace with human progress. But, in order to avoid all controversy over the standing text of the rules of the Senate, and to give the advantage of the doubt to those who may feel that they are entitled to it, the Chair accepts the 18th rule of the Senate, as it stands, free from all modifying parliamentary law, free from all the effects of custom, and is ready to consider that petitions and papers referred stand in the category with bills and resolves, so far as the duty of the Clerk and the question of reconsideration are concerned. He would recommend, however, that this 18th rule of the Senate be so amended as to conform to the 26th rule of the House, and to the best principles of parliamentary law.

The opinion of the Chair is, for these reasons, reversed, and the question is upon reconsidering the vote by which the Senate sustained the Chair in his opinion against reconsideration.

Thereupon, the roll was called, and the question was determined as follows, to wit :—

YEAS. —Messrs. Baker,	Bancroft,	Banister,
Brown,	Carpenter,	Clark,
Coe,	Dwellely,	French,
Fuller,	Giles,	Griggs,
Harmon,	Jacobs,	Johnson, N. L.,
Johnson, R.,	Lawrence,	Learnard,
Lobdell,	Merrill,	Morse,
Nye,	Packard,	Parsons,
Potter,	Stickney,	Thompson,
Todd,	Torrey,	Wallace,
Washburn,	Whittle,	Woods,
Woodwell,	Wright.—35.

NAY.—Mr. Baird.—1.

So the vote was reconsidered ; and the question then recurring on the reconsideration of the vote by which said bill was referred to the committee on Railways, it was taken by yeas and nays, as follows, to wit :—

YEAS. —Messrs. Baker,	Bancroft,	Carpenter,
Dwellely,	Fuller,	Griggs,
Harmon,	Jacobs,	Johnson, N. L.,
Learnard,	Parsons,	Thompson,
Torrey,	Wright.—14.

NAYS. —Messrs. Baird,	Banister,	Brown,

Griffin,	Johnson, R.,	Lawrence,
Lobdell,	Merrill,	Morse,

Resolution of thanks to the President.

Resolved, That the hearty acknowledgments of the Senate are due to their President, the Hon. George B. Loring, for the able and impartial manner in which he has presided over their deliberations, and for the graceful courtesy he has invariably shown to the members in his official capacity.

Resolved, That while the Senate congratulates him upon the efficiency with which he has discharged the duties of the Chair, duties always arduous, oftentimes perplexing, and frequently involving a sacrifice of personal feeling and preference, they cordially wish for him a like success in whatever position of public trust and responsibility he may be called hereafter to fill by the people of the Commonwealth.

The President resuming the Chair, repounded as follows:—

President.

SENATORS:—I am indeed gratified by the kind expressions contained in the resolves which you have just passed, and I beg you to accept my thanks for the generous courtesy which prompted them. The relations which have existed between us for the last few months I shall always remember with keen interest and satisfaction. I cannot forget the unanimity with which you called me to this position, nor the liberal and considerate manner in which you have steadily accepted my endeavors to discharge the duty you imposed upon me. The position of presiding officer of a legislative body is by no means easy. The obligation which rests upon him, to forget his personal interest, to rise above his personal prejudices, to maintain his high level as the justum et tenacem propositi virum, to be "kindly affectioned" towards all who come under his rule, to sympathize with the disappointments of the vanquished and to moderate the exultation of the victors, demand the largest and best exercise of all his moral faculties; while the necessity under which he labors to hold his mind ready for the sudden emergency, to recall the official phrase, to present a proposition in such clear and well-defined form that no man can fail to comprehend it, to distinguish between that which is founded on mere routine and that which rests upon the broad principles of parliamentary law, summons continually his best intellectual powers to the work in which he is engaged. If I have discharged such service as this in a manner to secure your approval, I am amply rewarded for my endeavors. If I have discharged it so as to have secured your respect and esteem and confidence, I have done more than I had the courage to expect when I commenced my labors here. It seems hardly necessary that I should assure you of the agreeable associations I have experienced, and the valuable acquaintances I have made at this board; but I do trust that I have secured for myself in your mind and hearts the same recognition and esteem which you have secured in mine. Of you I can say that to whatever duty I have called you, that duty has been done well. Of myself I can say that I have endeavored to summon each one of you to such service as I considered him best fitted to perform, regarding only the interests of the Commonwealth. I have scrupulously avoided throwing the weight of my official position into either scale, when personal or private matters have been under consideration, and I have conscientiously and in accordance with my best judgment, expressed my preference, when necessary, upon questions of general interest and involving the honor or the prosperity of the state. For the patient hearing and the generous support you have given my argument, and for the friendly acquiescence with which my vote has been received by those of you to whose views it was in opposition, I desire to express my warmest thanks. It is a mark of confidence which I shall not forget. On more than one occasion during this session I have deemed it wise to rule upon questions brought before the Senate in a manner accordant with what I believed to be both good constitutional and parliamentary law, and with the best precedent—holding myself ready in all instances to accept a reversal if necessary, either by my own judgment or by the judgment of the other branch. The support you have given me on such occasions encourages me to believe that you will join me in any future endeavors to remove all obstacles to the modification of law and rule, in conformity with the opinions I have given. On the question of money bills upon which I took occasion to rule, early in the session, that whether of grant or supply, of revenue or expenditure, they should originate in either branch, in accordance with the machinery and the spirit of our government, I have not changed my views. The history of the formation of the Constitution of Massachusetts shows that the provision with regard to money bills originated from a vague idea that the same distinctions would exist between the two branches of our legislature as existed between the two bodies constituting the British parliament. The desire to establish a branch representing the wealth and aristocracy of the country, even in the days when the most sturdy blows were struck for civil equality, constitutes one of the most remarkable features of those early debates. Theophilus Parsons in Massachusetts, Gouverneur Morris in the federal convention, and in later days Mr. Webster and Judge Story in this very capitol, set forth the importance of such a branch of the Legislature as that to which I have alluded. This idea was evidently derived from the structure of the legislative branch of the government of Great Britain, and it is not surprising that with this idea the provision for revenue and expenditure there should naturally have found a place here. It was in the Constitution of Massachusetts that the provision was first incorporated—a provision that all money bills, bills of grant and supply, bills of revenue and expenditure, should originate in the House of Representatives. From the Constitution of Massachusetts it found its way into the Constitution of the United States; and in both instruments it recognizes, or was intended to recognize a difference in the origin and objects of the two branches of the Legislature. Against this theory and against this practice, everything in the state legislatures, at least, now militates. The two branches are considered co-equal and co-ordinate. Repeated legislation, early and late, and accepted opinions from several of my most distinguished predecessors, have fixed as a law, that appropriation bills may originate in either branch, and history teaches us that appropriation bills were considered money bills, as much as, or more than were revenue bills; the jealous care for the spending of money being even greater in the Commons, where the whole system originated, than the care for the raising of money.

It is well known, moreover, to every student of our legislative history, that numerous acts and resolves, reported by joint committees, whose right it is to report in either branch, providing for the raising of the money to be devoted to the appropriation, have originated in the Senate, and have passed without question as to their origin. I look upon the provision of the Constitution, as it now stands, qualified by the phrase which in specific terms confers on the Senate the right to amend and concur, as so near a nullity, that its removal would be in entire accordance with the spirit of our government, and with that custom and law which have already removed from its operation one-half of those bills which were included under it. When appropriation bills were removed from this provision, it seems to me that revenue bills were borne along with them. In the constitutions of a large majority of the states, in New York and Ohio, in Illinois, Tennessee, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Mississippi, Wisconsin, Alabama, Florida, Nebraska, California, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut and others, it is provided, in some expressly, and in others by implication, that "any bills may originate in either House of the legislature, and all bills passed by one house may be amended by the other." This should be the case in Massachusetts; and I trust we shall ere long see our Constitution amended in this respect, so that it may entirely conform with the spirit of our legislation, and with that structure of our Legislature which has two equal and co-ordinate branches, to operate as a check and balance one upon the other, and each an immediate representation of the people. As one step in this direction, I trust that at an early day the rules and orders of the two branches will be so amended as to provide for a joint committee of Finance, in place of the inconvenient system of a committee on Finance in the House, and a committee on the Treasury in the Senate, which now exists. Every legislator knows the delays, and rivalries, and obstructions which grow out of the necessity of submitting to two independent committees, one in each branch, the same question. We complain of the length of our sessions, and we attribute it to inattention on the part of committees; to neglect on the part of the chairman of committees; to long hearings and long debates; but I am satisfied that the substitution of joint committees in all cases, on Finance, on the Judiciary as well, and on Probate and Chancery, will do much to facilitate legislation, will avoid complicated controversies, and will also do much to remove all jealousy between the two branches. I trust our successors will see that this is done. The Senate will undoubtedly remember the opinion I gave not many weeks ago, with regard to the retention of petitions, orders of inquiry and bills referred, by the Clerk, for the purpose of reconsideration. I stated then, that the best parliamentary law provided that such papers should pass at once to the committee to whom they were referred, and could not be a subject for reconsideration. The rule of the House is in conformity with this opinion; and I trust the 18th rule of the Senate will also be amended, as was the 26th rule of the House in 1862 and 1863, so that papers, such as I have alluded to, will find their destination at once in the Senate as they should and as they do in the House. And now, senators, our labors in this chamber are about to close. At the commencement of the session I endeavored to impress upon your minds the fundamental importance of the legislative branch of our government, and my conviction that whenever through weakness or corruption this should decay, our civil fabric would totter and fall. I thought then, and I think now, that honesty, fidelity and capacity are as essential to this service as are rapidity and active execution. I am sure there is no sphere in life in which mutual confidence and respect are so important as here, where duty can be faithfully performed only on a fair and through understanding. The best diplomacy is based on honesty—the best statesmanship is based on a candid avowal of one's faith and conviction and determination. Nowhere then, can the best instincts and the soundest faculties find so grand a field of labor as where the laws are made upon which an industrious, and educated, and moral community is to rest. I have witnessed with pleasure during my long service here, your faithful endeavors to be true to the best interests of the Commonwealth, and to be considerate and just towards each other. For myself, I commenced my work with misgiving; but I shall leave it with the satisfaction of feeling that each senator at this board has learned to respect his associates, and that between myself and you there has grown up a bond which will never be broken—that bond which is created by courteous association in mutual labor, and which no difference of opinion can ever destroy. I could not sit here day after day without establishing between myself and each one of you, an intimacy which can no more be obliterated than can the pictures imprinted on our minds, in our constant and familiar walk. I cannot, hereafter, avoid rejoicing with you in your prosperity, and sympathizing with you in your adversity. And as we part now, not to meet again in this capacity, and on this spot, I beg you to carry with you to your homes my best wishes for the welfare and the happiness of yourselves and all whom you hold dear. And let us not forget those upon whose patience and fidelity we have all depended for our comfort and convenience, and the order of our business. It is hardly necessary to give expression again, to that sentiment so often uttered here, of regard and esteem for our faithful, and intelligent, and reliable Clerk. To him and his young and amiable assistant, and to the official corps who have borne our messages and guarded our doors with such alacrity and firmness, I extend for you and myself, our warmest benedictions, and our sincere desire that their lives may be long and prosperous. Thanking you once more for your kind approbation, I recall you to the closing labors of the session.
